Dear Harry:

You will get a call from [] who has just graduated from Harvard College and wants a year's experience before going to graduate school (probably law school or the Kennedy School). He is a lively young man interested in the policy process, who persuaded me to be one of his honors thesis advisors, which he was doing in history and economics. I saw him for 45 minutes at least half a dozen times, steered him to several people to talk to, and read his finished thesis. It was on political corruption in Massachusetts, a historical comparison of corruption at the turn of the century with corruption during the past twenty years. It combined microeconomics and history. I was pleased with the way it came out.

You will probably find him enjoyable to talk to. I hope you can talk to him for a few minutes. Whatever he ends up doing, he will do with enthusiasm, talent, and good humor. While it would be nice if you had a job for him, my main interest is in giving him a chance to spend a little while talking to you about his own career prospects.

Best regards,

Thomas C. Schelling
